The Braai¹ by Maire Fisher

Moses Khoabane, an honest black man, lives with his wife and children. He is a worker in a vineyard². One day he meets Mpumi Mokae who makes him an offer.

“Such good news! This is a happy day,” said Moses Khoabane, bursting into the small front room of his house. Phindi, his wife, looked up with a smile. “What is it, Moses?” She knew her husband’s good mood. Even when times were hard, Moses managed to find a bright side to life.

“Guess who I bumped into on the street today as I was walking home.”

5 “Tell me,” Phindi said. “But sit down first and let me make you a cup of tea.”

“Hot and sweet, Phindi, just like you.”

Phindi smiled. “I am a lucky woman,” she placed a large mug of tea in front of him, then dropped a kiss on the top of his head. “Now tell me, who did you meet?”

“My old schoolmate Mpumi!”

10 Phindi wondered. “Mpumi Mokae? I thought he’d gone on to bigger and better things? What’s he doing back here?”

“Well that’s just it, Phindi. He was looking for me. There’s a job. A good job, and he told his boss that he knew just the man for it. It’s management, office work. Not just working in our vineyard.”

“So you’d be working in an office?” Phindi looked sceptical³. “But Moses, you only have one suit.”

15 “Phindi, my darling. With the money Mpumi talked about, I’ll be able to buy a new suit for every day of the week, including Sundays!”

Moses was so happy, Phindi didn’t want to burst his bubble⁴. Moses looked around the small front room. “We can even move, Phindi. To a bigger house. I can give you all you want.”

20 “Moses, my love,” Phindi said as she put her arms around him, “I have all I need. You, the kids, our home, our neighbours. I don’t expect you to buy me anything else.”

“Buy? Who’s talking about buying?” Thuli burst into the room. “I’m first in line, Daddy. You know, for my iPod and iPad and iPhone. What’s all the excitement?” Thuli pulled the fruit bowl towards her. Moses told her about the meeting with Mpumi.

25 “Isn’t he the one you were so friendly with at school?” Thuli asked. “The one you haven’t seen in years?”

¹ Braai – a South African kind of barbecue

² vineyard – an area of land where grapes are grown to produce wine

³ sceptical – to be unsure if something is true

⁴ burst someone’s bubble – jemandes Traum zum Platzen bringen

“That’s him,” Moses said. “But you know, Thuli, old friendships never die – they are strong. Oh – and I forgot. Mpumi wants us all to go over to their house for a braai. Sunday lunchtime, he said. We’ll have a few drinks, talk about old times.”

“Sunday?” Thuli said. “But Dad, I have ...”

- 30 “Whatever you have planned, can you cancel it for me? This is very important. Mpumi wants to meet my family and we’ll meet his.”

Moses’s face was alive with excitement.

“Sure, Dad.” Thuli stood up. “It’s just a study session with Anele and Nomsa. I’ll change the time.”

At the same time in Mpumi’s office:

- 35 Mpumi is on his phone, talking in a low voice. We only hear his side of the conversation.

“Yes, yes. I’m sure. I met Moses in the street, sir.”

“No, he didn’t suspect anything. I told you he’s naive. He’d never expect...”

“Well, that’s just it, sir. He thinks I’m his friend. He trusts me.”
